Films à la carte at the 2018 Alliance Française French Film Festival

The annual Brisbane French film festival is now in full swing, having launched last Thursday with a screening of C'est la vie! (more below).

The 29th Alliance Française French Film Festival offers something for everyone. From fans of film, to Francophiles, to aficionados, the program is populated with award-winners, classics-to-be, local screen premieres, family favourites. There's a host of outstanding dramas, love stories, comedies, historic epics and tales of self-discovery that will engage and delight the most discerning cinephile.

If you missed Thursday's launch screening of C'est la vie! a comedy by dynamic directorial duo behind the 2011 smash The Intouchables – It runs right throughout the festival at both venues and is one not to miss. Starring the inimitable Jean-Pierre Bacri – in a role penned especially for him – as Max, a famed, but cantankerous caterer and event organiser is tasked with creating a fairytale wedding at a sumptuous 17th century château. Saddled with a hopelessly inept assortment of staff, his pragmatic mantra, "We need to adapt," is thoroughly tested, as his meticulously planned event threatens to descend into comic farce.

Abandoned by her husband for a younger woman in the same week that she loses her job, she reluctantly returns to live with her kind, but over-bearing parents, who convince her to open an e-cigarette boutique, where romance beckons in the form of Miguel (Patrick Timsit), a neighbouring chef.

The 29th Alliance Française French Film Festival – the biggest French film fest outside of France – runs until April 4 at both Palace cinemas in Brisbane, Place Barracks and Palace Centro. The full program plans to entice audiences with a fine selection of 47 features, two documentaries and a cheeky Parisian TV series, which showcase the passion, artistry and dazzling diversity of contemporary French cinema.

Aussie film critic extraordinaire David Stratton has cast his finely tuned eye at some of the French flicks, which you can view at www.affrenchfilmfestival.org/reviews

For more info, full program, synopses and ticketing visit www.affrenchfilmfestival.org/

SOME MORE HIGHLIGHTS FROM THE FESTIVAL

BACK TO BURGUNDY (Ce qui nous lie)

Learning of his father's imminent death, Jean returns to his family's vineyard where over the course of a year, he and his siblings put aside their lingering resentments and strive to maintain their father's legacy against all expectations.

BLOODY MILK (Petit paysan)

When lonesome dairy farmer, Pierre, learns that a deadly virus has infected one of his much-loved herd, he attempts to hide the outbreak from the authorities, vowing to save them – even if it means resorting to drastic and irreversible measures. Winner of Best First Feature at the 2017 Philadelphia Film Festival.

CUSTODY (Jusqu'à la garde)

Critically acclaimed debut drama – winner of major awards at the recent Venice and Zurich Film Festivals along with the Sebastián and Palm Springs International Film Festivals – is a heart-stopping tale that follows a family's disintegration following an acrimonious divorce.

GAUGUIN (Gauguin – Voyage de Tahiti)

On self-imposed exile in Tahiti, painter Paul Gauguin seeks to rediscover his art, as a free man, far removed from the civilized restraints of 1890s Europe, and in doing so discovers the woman who becomes his muse and inspires his greatest paintings.

PARIS ETC. (Special TV Series Presentation)

Amidst the backdrop of Paris, this thoroughly entertaining television series takes a cheeky foray in the daily lives of five Parisian women, experiencing their hopes, dreams, frustrations, friendships and the different ways in which they each seek love. The Festival will be screening the first three 30-minute episodes of season one.

ROCK'N ROLL

In this droll comedy, Guillaume Canet, married to real-life partner, Marion Cotillard, leads a happy and fulfilling life. But when a chance remark leads him to feel that he has lost his sex appeal, he embarks upon an ego trip into the ridiculous.

SEE YOU UP THERE (Au revoir là-haut)

In this compelling, widely acclaimed drama, two survivors of the trenches, a brilliant, but horribly disfigured designer who hides behind elaborate masks, and a humble accountant, embark upon a dangerous, but spectacular scam, selling phony war memorials in 1920s France.

NEW MEMORIAL FOR FALLEN POLICE

The Brisbane Botanical Gardens will be home to a new memorial in honour of Queensland Police Service's (QPS) 145 fallen officers.

Several locations in Brisbane were considered for the memorial, but the gardens were eventually chosen as a peaceful place easily accessible to family and friends of fallen officers.

Police Minister Mark Ryan said the Queensland Police Service Academy was currently home to a temporary memorial in honour of the Queensland police officers who gave their lives in the performance of their duty or during active service in the First World War.

The names of the 145 fallen police will appear on the memorial," he said.

"We the police union came up with the idea and built the original memorial on George Street and this new location in the Botanic Gardens is also symbolic for us as it is in the vicinity of the first police station in Queensland.

Each year prior to the official remembrance celebrations held on September 29, the QPS honours its fallen officers by conducting a candlelight vigil at the site of the memorial. These commemorative actions allow family members, colleagues and the community to pay respect and honour those officers.

"It's now up to the people who will be affected by this plan to speak up and give any feedback they may have about the draft. Then it's up to the community to put these words into action. It's been a long time coming but finally the people of the Moreton Bay Region can see what they should expect in a community that is both accessible and inclusive," Ms Wright said.

I CAN'T CONTROL MY TEMPER OR MY LANGUAGE WITH MY EX AND IN FRONT OF MY KIDS

Dear Leonie,

This February, I separated from my husband of nine years and I can't tell you how much he is eating away at me. When I have to talk to him I can't control my temper or my language.

He hurt me so badly that I only have to hear his voice and I get a knot in my stomach. Consequently, having to talk to him turns me into a human volcano and I erupt with anger.

I know that I shouldn't act like this in front of the children but I can't seem to check myself. He makes my blood boil. He always says something that he knows will set me off. I have talked to my doctor about this and she sent me to a psychologist in Brisbane who said that I have anger issues.

After making me fill out tons of forms, she told me that I was aggressive and needed to do an anger management workshop. I think this is baloney because the only person who gets me angry is him. I have been a palliative care nurse for over 30 years and I've never lost my temper, not even when patients have thrown urine and worse at me. So of course anger management is not what I need.

I feel haggard and run down and fantasise about my ex coming to a miserable end. The truth is that he is not a bad father and the children love him still.

We are a long way from finalising property and custody arrangements. I was wondering if seeing a counsellor would be a better experience than I had with a psychologist. What would you do with me?

Toni/North Lakes

Hi Toni,

I am mostly a solution focused counsellor and I rarely use "tick and flick" forms unless I suspect a clinical disorder. To help someone, I feel you have to engage fully with them, not just hand them forms to fill out. I too doubt that you have anger issues/disorder because you say that you only get angry with your ex. So, if what you say is true, we can say pretty safely say that your ex is your trigger and seeing as there is only one of him, you don't need an anger management workshop but rather you may need to change the unhealthy way you are dealing with your ex.

The one strategy that I think would help you the most is to pretend that you are on camera. That's right on camera. Just pretend that every interaction that you have with your husband is being recorded and played to the Family Law Court and a copy will be played to your children when they are adults. This sounds silly but it works for my clients 99% of the time. At the moment all you are doing is giving your ex evidence that you are unstable. By pretending everything is being recorded, you are thinking and acting in a purposeful and appropriate way and your children will see you exactly as you want them to see you. And you know what? You are really being recorded. You are being recorded in your children's memories. I believe that children always remember which parent fought fair and took the high road and which parent slung mud and tried to turn them against their other parent.

You can't change who he is or what he did but you can change how you react to him and take pride in your ability not to let him get you flustered and angry.

Treat your meeting and conversations with your ex like a business meeting. Keep it formal, polite and not emotive. If he tries to take the conversation off track to fire you up, bring him back on topic. Only take calls about arrangements for the children and their needs.

If he calls about property or to just argue, end the call by saying something like, "My solicitor's number is XX..., please don't call me directly unless it's regarding the children" then hang up. If he calls on the pretence of making arrangements for access times etc but then starts to argue about something else, you might try saying something like, "This is no longer about the children, I'm going to hang up now."

I would encourage you to stay firm and consistent. People only continue to do something if there is a payoff for them in some way. Perhaps your ex is getting a payoff for his upsetting behaviour by seeing you upset and out of control. If this is the case, eventually he will learn that there is no joy to be had in trying to upset you and he will see that he won't get his pay day and give up. If none of the above works, consider using an outside agency to handle all your communication with your ex including custody arrangements.

Til next week. Leonie

QUEENSLAND TO STRENGTHEN SECURITY MEASURES

With futuristic biometric face matching

Queensland last week became the first state to amend legislation to allow police access to shared cutting-edge biometric face matching services.

Police Minister Mark Ryan said the Police and Other Legislation (Identity and Biometric Capability) Amendment Bill 2018 had been passed to strengthen security measures and improve Queenslanders' safety in time for the biggest event ever held in this State – the Gold Coast 2018 Commonwealth Games.

"This Bill comes off the back of a COAG agreement between the Federal Government and all states and territories to allow law enforcement agencies in all jurisdictions to share access to passport, visa, citizenship and driver's licence images," Mr Ryan said.

"This is a vital investigative tool that will allow police to stay one step ahead of terrorists and criminals involved in identity fraud, with identity crime impacting one in 20 Australians every year and the annual cost to the Australian community estimated to be $2.2 billion.

"Image matching services will also help identify disaster victims."

"Queensland and other jurisdictions already share identity information on a manual and ad hoc basis, but the identity matching services will make it simpler and faster for law enforcement and security agencies to share information."

"This will be of real benefit to those tasked with the security of the Commonwealth Games, which represents a once-in-a-lifetime event that will demonstrate to the world the great things Queensland has to offer.

"We are expecting both international and interstate guests to attend so I encourage the Federal Government and all states and territories to ensure this legislation is passed in time for the Commonwealth Games.

the investigative tool will allow police to stay one step ahead of terrorists and criminals involved in identity fraud, and help identify disaster victims

"This system will have robust privacy safeguards and be implemented in consultation with the Australian Privacy Commissioner and it will be audited by the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner."

Queensland Police Deputy Commissioner Steve Gollschewski acknowledged the importance of the capability for policing both at the Games and into the future.

"This national capability will provide the Queensland Police Service with a significant tool, not only in ensuring the security of the Commonwealth Games but in addressing the increasing challenges posed by identity fraud and other serious crimes that are enabled as a result, including terrorism," he said.

"For the Games, the ability to use the Face Verification Service will significantly benefit Operational Sentinel – the security operation for the Games."

"This access will allow the comparison of images with immigration and citizenship records held by Australian Government agencies and enable the rapid identification of people."

"As the Games draw nearer it is envisaged that other agencies will come on board to share their holdings."

"The capacity for law and security agencies to share critical facial biometric information about the identity of offenders – just like we have for a hundred years with fingerprints and more recently with DNA – is central to meeting the challenges we face now and into the future."

Mr Ryan said the Bill also increased the maximum penalty for explosives offences, from two and three years imprisonment respectively to seven years imprisonment, and amended the Liquor Act 1992 to provide an extra hour of liquor trading during the 2018 Commonwealth Games in the Gold Coast Safe Night Precincts of Broadbeach and Surfers Paradise.

AUSTRALIA'S CLEAN ENERGY FUTURE

Climate Council's Roadmap

A National Energy Roadmap outlining how Australia can cut its rising greenhouse gas pollution levels, while continuing the transition to clean, affordable and reliable renewable energy and storage technology, has been released by the Climate Council.

The 'Clean & Reliable Energy: Roadmap To A Renewable Future' report features 12 key policy principles for any national energy and climate policy framework, including calls for the rollout of a minimum 50-70% renewable energy target across Australia by 2030.

"Australia needs a fresh approach to cutting greenhouse gas pollution from our electricity," said Climate Councillor and energy expert Greg Bourne.

"The Federal Government's offering of the National Energy Guarantee simply doesn't cut it on improving energy reliability, cutting power prices and tackling climate change. Australia can do better than this."

"Australia's transition to renewables and storage is already underway. The only thing placing this at risk is political will. This roadmap calls for twelve basic, key policy principles that should apply to any credible national climate and energy policy in Australia."

The 'Roadmap To A Renewable Future' framework recommends Australia continues to transition away from its ageing, polluting and inefficient coal and gas fleet and encourage investment in a new clean power supply. The report calls for pollution targets which can be ratcheted up along with transparent tracking and reporting of carbon pollution levels.

"This roadmap shows that it's our electricity sector that has the greatest potential to slash pollution through the transition to a 21st Century energy grid, consisting of clean renewables and storage technologies."

"In order to tackle climate change, the electricity sector needs to cut its carbon pollution by more than 60 per cent over the next decade and head towards zero pollution. Renewables plus storage is how we can do it."

KEY RECOMMENDATIONS INCLUDE:

- Australian climate and energy policy must accept the need for deep pollution cuts from the electricity sector in order to limit global temperature rise and tackle climate change.
- This means slashing carbon pollution from the electricity sector by 60% by 2030, and ensuring that targets can be ratcheted up over time.
- The Australia's electricity sector needs plans in place to reach net zero emissions well before 2050. This is in line with National Energy Market state and territory commitments.
- To have any effect on carbon pollution (and not just add bureaucratic red tape), any NEM wide emissions target for 2030 and beyond must meet or exceed the total level of state and territory targets.
- Australia must achieve a minimum of 50 - 70% renewable energy across Australia by 2030.
- A credible reliable climate and energy policy needs to encourage investment in new clean power supply - when and where needed - well in advance of coal closures, and not place reliability in the hands of ageing coal and gas generators.

The report also features key findings highlighting how the Federal Government's proposed National Energy Guarantee risks derailing Australia's booming renewable energy and storage sector and will not provide an integrated solution to improving reliability or tackling climate change.

Climate Councillor and energy sector veteran Professor Andrew Stock said that the Federal Government was missing in action when it comes to credible climate and energy policy.

"The proposed National Energy Guarantee falls short across the board when it comes to reliable affordable power and tackling climate change. It simply doesn't deliver on any of these key goals."

Professor Stock said the Federal Government must go beyond the states' leadership and rollout strong and credible climate and energy policy in order to drive the necessary cuts to greenhouse gas pollution in the electricity sector, while also maintaining reliable and affordable power.

"The window of opportunity to tackle climate change is rapidly closing. Australia cannot settle for anything less than strong, credible climate and energy policy. The NEG is anything but that," he said.

POPULAR JOB SEEKER BOOT CAMP ON AGAIN

Federal Member for Petrie, Luke Howarth's Job Seeker Boot Camp is back by popular demand and will be held at the Deception Bay Club on Friday 23rd March at 10:30am.

"This event has been successful in linking both job seekers and employers," Mr Howarth said.

Since the first Boot Camp was run in 2016 – locals have had the opportunity to listen and learn from local employers about ensuring their resume stands out, job interviewing skills and also the benefits of networking.

"I have been approached in the community by previous attendees who have told me that the lessons learnt at the Boot Camp have helped them secure employment."

Some of the top tips for success have included a good attitude, punctuality, and cold-calling employers.

Following a complimentary lunch, there will be a two hour workshop on resume writing and interview techniques.

"I want to bring our community together to help as many job seekers as possible build their networks and expand their job opportunities," Mr Howarth said.

Attendance at the Boot Camp is free and interested job seekers can contact Mr Howarth's office on 3284 8008 for more details or email luke.howarth.mp@aph.gov.au

TOW TRUCK SHARKS OUTLAWED

Laws passed to outlaw dodgy tow truck operators

After years of being ripped off, RACQ has hailed the passing of legislation to outlaw towing industry sharks as a win for Queensland drivers

The laws, which meant it would be illegal for dodgy tow truck operators to strongarm motorists into paying exorbitant fees to release their vehicles, were passed by Queensland Parliament on Thursday.

This followed an independent investigation into the removal of parked vehicles from private car parks, and meant changes to tow truck licence requirements, fees, signage, privacy, education and enforcement.

RACQ Head of Technical and Safety Policy said RACQ tow trucks, which did not conduct unauthorised tows from private property, had long supported the need for higher standards of safety and conduct.

"Dodgy tow truck operators have been getting away with highway robbery for far too long, charging exorbitant fees for the release of vehicles from carparks," Mr Spalding said.

"We're really pleased the State Government has acted and passed these laws because it sets the standard of behaviour for tow truck operators who've been capitalising on vulnerable motorists for far too long.

Transport and Main Roads Minister Mark Bailey said Queensland would be the first State in the country to cap towing fees from private car parks.

"We are also increasing the maximum penalty that can be imposed under the Tow Truck Regulation from $2,523 to $10,092," Mr Bailey said.

"The proposed legislation will also make it clear that we can consider a person's entire criminal history when assessing whether they should be granted a licence or certificate."

it's a response to community concern about alleged shady practices, intimidating tactics and excessive fees

Mr Bailey said the changes would commence in April to allow time for stakeholders to comply and would:

- require that private property towing may only be performed in regulated areas by drivers and assistants who have the necessary certificates and are using licensed tow trucks
- require tow truck licensees to have towing consent evidencing an arrangement with the occupier to remove vehicles from the property and to notify the Queensland Police Service as soon as practicable after removing a vehicle from private property
- impose conduct requirements on tow truck licensees, drivers and assistants including prohibiting intimidating, abusive or insulting behaviour, and requiring reasonable steps be taken to locate the motorist before loading a vehicle onto the tow truck

- provide that vehicles removed from private property may only be taken by the most direct route to the licence holder's nearest holding yard

- set maximum towing charges for a standard private property tow ($250), the on-site release of a vehicle ($150) and storing a vehicle ($25) and prohibiting the charging of call-out fees and charges for separate activities incidental to the towing service such as administration fees

- safeguard motorists' privacy by restricting the disclosure of information about the removal of a vehicle from private property and expressly protecting personal information about a vehicle's owner, driver or other party connected to a regulated towing service

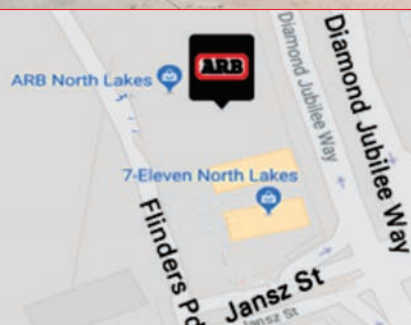

- increase the maximum penalty that may be imposed under the Tow Truck Regulation from 20 penalty units ($2523) to 80 penalty units ($10,092), and

- allow the entire criminal history of an applicant, including any charge for an offence that has not been dealt with by a court or withdrawn or otherwise discontinued, may be considered when determining whether to grant a licence or certificate and whether a person is an appropriate person to continue to hold a licence or certificate.

EXPERTS PREDICT END OF CERVICAL CANCER

BY DR ANITA, BRISBANE NORTH PHN

Human Papillomavirus (HPV) infection among Australian women is continuing its dramatic fall, an excellent result largely attributed to successful vaccination and screening programs that will eventually see cervical cancer eliminated.

Persistent HPV infection can cause abnormal cells to develop on the cervix. Over time, these abnormal cells may develop into cervical cancer if left untreated.

Cervical cancer's demise within our lifetime has been predicted by the International Papillomavirus Society (IPVS), the global authority in this field.

According to IPVS member Professor Suzanne Garland, who spoke to Fairfax Media, Australia will likely be the first country to achieve the milestone of cervical cancer eradication.

"We are forecasting that over the next 30-40 years, rates of cervical cancer will drop from around the current 1000 cases a year in Australia to just a few," Professor Garland said.

To achieve this result on a global scale, the IPVS says the effective and cost-effective prevention methods currently available will need to be expanded, to include those who are not currently vaccinated or screened.

Thankfully, Australia is already well on the way towards this goal.

Research published last month in the Journal of Infectious Diseases found the rate of HPV infection among Australian women aged 18 to 24 declined from 22.7 per cent to just 1.5 per cent, over the decade to 2015.

The study also showed a substantial fall occurred in women aged 25 to 35, despite lower vaccine coverage in this population cohort, attributed in part to protection through herd immunity.

Herd immunity occurs when enough people in a population are immunised. The disease cannot pass from person to person, so it dies out instead of spreading.

A quadrivalent HPV vaccination program targeting females aged 12 to 13 years began in Australia in 2007, with catch-up vaccination of 14 to 26 year olds through 2009.

A new Cervical Screening Test introduced in December last year is our other secret weapon against cervical cancer.

This simple procedure feels the same as the Pap test, but instead of looking for changes to the cells of the cervix, the new test finds the virus that causes the cell changes in the first place.

The Pap smear test needed to be done every two years and, for most women aged 25 to 74, their first Cervical Screening Test is due two years after their last Pap test.

After that, they will only need to have the test every five years if their result is normal.

If HPV is found, the laboratory will do a Pap test on the same sample of cells. Women will get follow-up treatment based on the results of both tests.

Women aged under 25 no longer need to be screened for cervical cancer.

This is because cervical cancer is extremely rare in women under 25 and cervical screening does not appear to have been effective for women in this age bracket.

For everyone else, regular cervical screening, along with HPV vaccination, is a woman's best protection against cervical cancer.

However, it is recognised that some women will not be tested for various reasons. In these cases, self-testing may be offered to women who are currently overdue for their cervical screening or have never screened before.

Keep in mind though that about 800 women are diagnosed with cervical cancer in Australia each year and about 80 per cent of these cases occur in women who have never screened or were not up-to-date with their screening.

Speak to your doctor if you have any questions about the Cervical Screening Test.

YOUR STARS

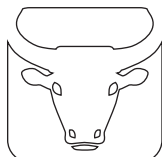

Aquarius Jan 21-Feb 19: There's nothing wrong with taking a few steps back. It's conducive to future progress. Paths in life are rarely straight.

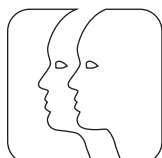

Pisces Feb 20- March 20: No matter what you do, your opponent won't budge. And in a way, this is good. It makes you more resourceful.

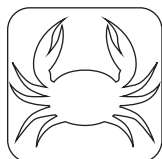

Aries March 21-April 20: Changes at work are in response to long ignored problems. What looks like back sliding is actually the foundation being made more secure.

Taurus April 21- May 21: You may need a translator for all the big talk today, hang tough and know people will alter their positions on an hourly basis.

Gemini May 22-June 21: You're in a fix. Move away and you alienate support. Back off and you fail to win others confidence. Whatever you do act decisively.

Cancer June 22-July 23: Surrounded by conflicting opinions, you're understandably overwhelmed. But listen to new as well as familiar voices.

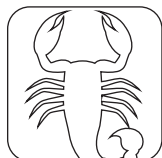

Leo July 24-Aug 23: There are three different ways a situation could go. Yet none of them on their own is satisfying. Look for a way to incorporate the best of each.

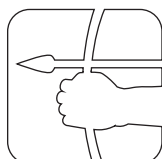

Virgo Aug 24-Sept 23: A disagreement will be resolved. So instead of walking away, it looks like you'll relax your resistance.

Libra Sept 24-Oct 23: With so many people pulling in different directions, you could be torn apart if you hold back. Let them go their own way, they'll be back.

Scorpio Oct 24-Nov 22: Faced with a dilemma? Don't get yourself tied up in it. Time to push forward and cut it in half.

Sagittarius Nov 23-Dec 21: You know things are rarely held together with spit and glue, but don't let that stop you. You've succeeded on more rickety vehicles than this.

Capricorn Dec 22-Jan 20: In a world of hype, it's rare when someone is actually skilled that gets too show off. You've done a good job. Let your work speak for itself.

HOW IS THE STATE PERFORMING?

Gold and Sunshine Coasts rule real estate roost

The beachfront markets of the Gold and Sunshine Coast, and Noosa, have finished 2017 with the strongest growth in the state, significantly outperforming Brisbane.

The Gold Coast delivered a gold medal performance, with the annual median house price growing by 7.7 per cent, to end the year on $615,000.

The Sunshine Coast median house price grew 6.4 per cent to end the year at $569,000 and Noosa grew 6.2 per cent to deliver an annual median house price of $650,000, finishing the year just $15,000 below Brisbane LGA median house price.

REIQ CEO Antonia Mercorella said Noosa was an area where demand was placing strong pressure on limited supply levels.

"This is an area that could do with more supply, but clearly the topography makes that challenging.

"Noosa's world-class beaches, stunning natural bushland settings and wonderful warm community are factors that are fanning the flames of buyer demand. It is inevitable that this will push up prices," she said.

The Gold Coast market has benefited from a strong local economy, a direct result of the infrastructure spend ahead of the Commonwealth Games.

Upward pressure on prices has seen some suburbs demonstrate explosive median house and median unit price growth.

Mermaid Beach is the Gold Coast's most expensive suburb for houses, with growth of 8.9 per cent delivering a median house price of $1.56 million.

The Main Beach unit market grew a whopping 14.3 per cent and is the most expensive suburb to buy a unit, with a median unit price of $720,000.

The Gold Coast is facing the tightest rental market in years, with vacancies at just 1.1 per cent. With significant supply still forecast to come onto the market in the next 18 months conditions in the rental market are expected to ease in the post-Games period.

Comparing the three superstar markets of the Gold Coast, the Sunshine Coast and Noosa, with Brisbane LGA, we can see demand is stronger for beachside living.

The Brisbane market grew a modest 2.6 per cent, to end 2017 with a median house price of $665,000.

While growth levels elsewhere are enviable, Brisbane is the only market to have a $2 million suburb, as Teneriffe stormed into the prestigious club of one. This tightly held suburb of around 400 houses ended 2017 with a median house price of $2.4 million and if a stroll. This region had a solid 2015 and began its slowdown in 2016, which has continued through 2017. The median house price grew a modest 1.4 per cent to $355,000 in 2017 while the unit market slipped 1.3 per cent to end the year on $305,000.

The Fraser Coast market has turned a corner and delivered 2.6 per cent growth to median house prices over the past 12 months, ending the year on $316,000. This market has also grown almost 11 per cent since 2012, showing steady, reliable growth.

The median unit price continues to struggle and fell 2.4 per cent over the 12 months to December, finishing at $255,000.

stabilisation of demand and the median price.

The Rockhampton market is starting to see a more stable level of demand, with the median house price contracting just 1.9 per cent in 2017, to end on $265,000. The market is 11.1 per cent below where it was five years ago, which is relatively modest when compared with markets such as Mackay, which is down 23.7 per cent on five years ago.

Buying a unit in Rockhampton remains a more expensive exercise than buying a house, with the median unit price ending the year 1.3 per cent below where it started, on $295,000. This is $30,000 more expensive than buying a house.

Mackay has finally started to demonstrate growing demand, with the market holding steady over the 12 months to December 2017. Anecdotal evidence has come from local agents all through the year suggesting the market was improving, but until now the data has not supported their assertions.

The Mackay annual median house price is $325,000, based on more than 1000 transactions throughout the year. The unit price continues to struggle and fell almost 13 per cent in 2017, to finish on $205,000.

The Townsville market slipped 2.5 per cent, to finish the year on an annual median house price of $328,000. Townsville has recently had a drought-breaking drenching and the optimism in this northern city is palpable.

Ms Mercorella said it was possible the rain would have a positive impact on the property market.

"The optimism is very evident, the city has greened up and everyone is optimistic about the future," she said. "This could easily translate to increased buyer confidence," she said.

The Cairns house market was one of the standout regional performers with the median house price growing 3.8 per cent to end the year on $410,000. The unit market fell 2.7 per cent.

Ms Mercorella said with a strong tourism sector, jobs growth had helped the property market perform well.

current growth levels continue, it's likely this area could reach an annual median of $3 million next year.

Brisbane's second-most expensive suburb is New Farm, with an annual median house price of $1.5 million. In a surprising twist, this market fell 4.4 per cent over the year, ending the year lower than it started.

The apartment markets in most parts of the state delivered a fairly subdued result over 2017, with the notable exception of the Gold Coast, which grew a hefty 3.7 per cent. This market continues to enjoy strong demand across both houses and units.

Rounding out the southeast corner, the Toowoomba property market's dream run is slowing to REIQ CEO Antonia Mercorella said there was clearly more confidence in the market as buyers returned to the a market that offered a beautiful coastal lifestyle.

"This is an area where buyers can be confident they will achieve capital growth over time and the market fundamentals are steady," she said.

Bundaberg has delivered a year of modest growth, adding 2.2 per cent to its median house price and finishing the year on $285,000.

Gladstone's housing market continued to slip, contracting 13.9 per cent to a median house price $280,000. This annual median house price brings Gladstone into line with similar regional towns, such as Bundaberg, and it is the hope that this might lead to a
